Vintage Textile Packing Workshop to be Held at the McKinley Presidential Library & Museum

Canton, Ohio... The McKinley Presidential Library & Museum will host a hands-on vintage textile packing workshop on Saturday October 16 at 1:00 PM. Participants are invited to bring one item, such as a wedding dress or quilt, to be packed in a museum-quality archival box during the workshop. The cost is $85 per person and includes one-on-one instruction and all packing materials, including a large archival box and acid-free tissue.

Following a short program on how museums preserve textiles presented by Executive Director Kim Kenney, museum staff will demonstrate how to pack a historical garment. Afterwards, participants will pack their own textiles, with assistance from museum staff. Participants will socially distance and required to wear a mask during the workshop.

This event is offered as an exhibit-based program for the current Keller Gallery exhibition “Why Do We Collect?”

ABOUT THE EXHIBITION

“Why Do We Collect?” features 30 carefully selected ordinary objects with stories from donors that make them special. For example, visitors will see a bronze statue of a horse that was a midway game prize at Meyers Lake Amusement Park. The statue does not have any words on it, which means that its history would have been lost if the donor had not made a special effort to preserve it.

The exhibition also explores how and why museums build their permanent collections, how we assign meaning to material objects, and the psychology behind personal collecting. To illustrate the process of conservation in museums, two of First Lady Ida McKinley’s gowns are on display, accompanied by detailed information about the conservation treatment they have received to stabilize them. The exhibition also explores how museums collect history in the making, illustrated by a selection of COVID-19 related items collected by the staff in their daily lives.

A special section of the exhibition explores the evolution of lighting devices and telephones, to explain how museums document everyday life over time.

“Why Do We Collect?” will be on view in the Keller Gallery through January 16, 2021.
